Determinants of the adoption of I4.0 technologies: Evidence from Spanish provinces 2022
Bachelor's Thesis (With honours)

- Analyzed the factors that affect adoption in the Spanish provinces, as well as the strength and direction of the possible effects
- Results supporting the presented hypotheses and point to a strong positive effect of human capital, together with spatial spillover effects, among others, on the level of Industry 4.0 technologies imports in Spanish provinces

The Hidden Costs of Regulating Childcare Quality R&R Labour Economics
Master's Thesis and Ongoing Project

- Spain's policy to improve early childhood education quality enhanced nursery standards but reduced childcare availability, leading to lower maternal labor supply, particularly among Spanish and non-single mothers.
- The findings emphasize the need to balance quality improvements with accessibility to better support maternal employment.

Childcare and Family Dynamics Work in Progress
With Laia Bosque-Mercader and Mara Barschkett

- Spain's policy to provide an extra year of childcare at age 3 in the 1990s reduces the number of abortions and marital breakups and increases fertility and marriages.
- Free universal childcare can have impacts beyond the commonly studied, such as an improvement of family stability.
